The Plot Thickens-The Milk in the Coconnut-Hard Swearing - The House

From the Cour'er-Journal.] Washington, March 15, 1869. THE PLOT THICKENS.

There is a demoralization to-day in be political situation. The Presiden failed to send to the Senate the promised list of appointments which disappointed the ravenous office seekers. The Speaker appointed the standing committees, which created almost unprecedented growling among the Radical members of the House, and finally the Republican Sensters met in caucus and voted to turn out Congressional Printer Defrees, Sergeant-at-arms Brown, and the executive among the Radical politicians than would at first be imagined.

The new Democratic members are put to the tall end of unimportant committees. The Speaker also makes some queer freaks. For instance, he takes Trimiole, of Kentucky, from the Pacific Railroad Committee, and puts on Roots, of Arkansas, a carpet-bagger who used to be a laborer on Trimble's railroad in Kentucky. The Election Committee is most unfairly organized— Randall, one of the two Democrats on it, having no knowledge of law. There are twenty contested cases to be depided. On Tuesday evening last, says the Pulashi Citizen, a difficulty arose at the grocery store of Mr. Malone, between that itleman and a negro named Learner Marks, in which shots were interchanged. Marks was drunk, and had been lounging upon Mr. M.'s counter for severa hours; the latter becoming tired of his esence asked him to leave, and at one ime led him out of the house and seated him on a box. The negro came back almost immediately and resumed his position on the counter, when Mr. M. again repeated his request and attempted to lead him out. The negro resisted, and Mr. M. forced him out at the door, when the negro drew his pistol. Here the evilence is not positive as to who fired first, but it is plain that the negro made the first attempt to shoot, and in all probabillity did fire the first shot. The negro received one shot in the hand and another in the arm. Mr. Malone was not touched. Both parties were immediate ly arrested and tried before Justice Abernathy. Malone was discharged and the negro bound over, and in default of $500 bail, sent to jail.

THE KILLING OF WALLACE.

The Cames Leading to his Cowardly Murder.

From the Augusta (Ga.) Chroniele, Elth.]

Yesterday morning, Mr. Charles Wallace, the well known editor of the Warrenton Chipper, was shot dead. It seems that Mr. Wallace had sent in an application to become a Mason to the Lodge in that place and was rejected, two black balls being cast against him. Mr. Wallace was informed that the only man who voted agains: him was a notorious scalawag and political enemy, a Dr. Darder, and that he must have dropped two black balls instead of one into the ballot-box, and, to make the matter worse, just before the meeting Darden promised a friend of Mr. Wallace, though they were political enemies, that he would take no part against him in the published an srticle commenting very severely on Darden's treacherous course. dent Democrat, had so often dealt through the columns of the Clipper on the scalawage of Warren county, planned his death. On Friday morning last, soon after breakfast, he is said to have ensconced himself at a window in the second story of a house overlooking the public square, and armed with a rifle, a valted from this, his place of concealment, the approach of his enemy. He had not long to wait. The office of the Clipper was situated en the same square, and after awhile its editor made its appearance on the street. Suspecting no danger and unprepared for its encounter, he walked briskly down the thoroughfare, little thinking that not many yards in front of him lurked the assassin who sought his life. A few sleps further and the concealed craven ares that the time has arrived when he may take his revenge without risking his carcass; the rifle is brought to a steady rust, me eye of the hunter sights" of the weapon to his huma prey; another step, and there is heard the sharp crack of the rifle, a tiny cloud of smoke is seen to float lazily up toward heaven from the window, and Charles Wallace, pierced in a vital spot by the A Woman Burned to Beath in Bloant and falls dead in the street, killed by the hand of a brutal and cowsrdly as Mr. Wallace was quite a young man, Last Sabbath night, on Crooked Creek, but, we believe, leaves a wife and two in this county, a heart-rending accident or three children. He was boso in Vircoursed. About ten e'clock the house ginia, but has been living in Warrenton of Mrs. Miriam Hooker was discovered to for several years, and was highly es-be on lire. men, and they are pointing out the day ger which menaces the British East Inare these apprehensions ldle or groundless. Khokan has been, for some time pest, all but absorbed into the Russian Empire; the Khanate of Khiva saes with apparent tranquility, the same fate drawing near; and the cession of the famous City of Samar und and its territory has reduced the Emir of Bokhars, a potentate connected with a tragical pisade in Anglo Indian history, to the ondition of a Russian vicercy, and Russian citizans are beginning, according to their own boast, to feel themselves at last at home in Turkestan. The Jaxar tes and Lake Aral have long had their locillas of steam gunhoats. The Oxus and Caspian are about to have them. Armed conquest preceded as the pioneer; but now commerce, which has been gradincreasing since 1850, has made a great stride onwards, and promises to consol whom goods are admitted by the last at as low an ad valorem duty as those of Mohammedans, and they are beginning to take advantage of their new

While this condition of affairs in Asia is recognized by the English press, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg has addressed the Rusvian goverument relative to its advance in the direction of India. This is evidently in tended to draw the Russian fire, and ascertain, if possible, the real purpose of Russia in extending her arms and arts Central Asia. Of course the Czar is oo cunning a statesman and diplomatist show the real condition of his hand. But he is a Russian, and cannot and will DEAN, McGINNIS & CO., not forget the part England played in the Crimean affair. After entering into an agreement with Russia that the power and influence of Napoleon and France should be curbed, "perficiens Albion pined hands with her hereditary enemy marched troops to Sevastopol, and aided in the termination of that memorable strugg'e. From that moment dates the cement of Russian movements of a decided anti-British character in lentral Asia. The Czar means to keep the British occupied in guarding their possessions and interests in that remote gion, in order to prevent a duplication of the Crimean association, in case the Office, 1st National Bank.
